

Route

We begin in Torre de Moncorvo. In the town centre, we see a wooden structure that is a combination of architecture and artistic installation, distribution cabinets to be deciphered, and EDP Distribuição transformation substations camouflaged in the landscape. Next, we head to Mogadouro, a particularly silent place in the Trás-os-Montes landscape. The pieces on display are diverse, notably the region's traditional masks immortalized in a painting on the substation at Rua da Fonte Nova. We reach Miranda do Douro, where there is now a video installation, distributed throughout various locations in the city, which contemplates the nature/culture binomial, as well as a sound installation that brings us sounds from the landscape. There are also portraits of a piper and folk dancer. Finally, the good people of Alfândega da Fé. Grasping the meaning of a cheese press, the importance of the chestnut, the symbolism associated with the rebirth of the phoenix and chatting with the locals at the end of the day.

"Through this programme, the edp foundation helps bring rural communities into closer contact with art, while also provoking reflection on its role in society. Furthermore, it has additional merit: to reconcile within a single programme the edp foundation's two key fields of intervention: social innovation and culture. This is a project that mobilises artists and rural communities in an innovative dialogue that will result in an unexpected public art route and a source of pride for all parties involved."

“Art in EDP Dams” Bemposta - Pedro Cabrita Reis, “Da cor das flores” (2011 - The colour of flowers).
Da cor das flores is an artistic intervention that summons painting, as well as sculpture. The landscape, which acts as the background and medium in this work, emerges as an agitated canvas or an untamed sculptural base where the artist placed the materials for his work: 2.700 litres of yellow paint, which recalls the cranes that worked on the dam, as well as the Genistae flowers (broom) that blossom in the surroundings.
